After violence in Charlottesville, tech companies start to ban white supremacist organizations

Tech companies refusing service to hate groups in the wake of Charlottesville

Sunday 8/13 Sunday 8/13 Monday 8/14 Tuesday 8/15 Wednesday 8/16 Violent The Daily Stormer Facebook removed a white GoDaddy PavPal nationalist's account demonstrations dropped The Daily registered its reportedly by white Stormer, a neodomain with stopped serving Cloudfare ended its relationship supremacists in Nazi website, from Google, which some white with The Daily Stormer almost immediately Charlottesville, its domain nationalist Twitter suspended The Daily registration removed the website Stormer's accounts VA websites Apple Pav stopped servicing system some white supremacist sites Squarespace removed certain white supremacist sites Spotify removed music by white supremacist artists The Daily Stormer moves to a Russian domain GoDaddy announced that the organization's ®GoDaddy™ website violated their terms of service by content that "could incite additional violence" Previously, GoDaddy had responded to criticism for hosting the website by arguing that "tasteless content is protected by free speech" Russian domain After failing to find a home at Google, The Daily Stormer moved to the dark web with a Russian domain name

Sources: David McCabe and Sara Fischer, "Hate speech tests tech's core principles," Axios, August 17, 2017; Katie Mettler and Avi Selk, "GoDady – then Google – ban neo-Nazi site Daily Stormer for disparaging Charlottesville victim," The Washington Post, August 14, 2017; Timothy Lee, "Racist Daily Stormer moves to Russian domain after losing .com address," Ars Technica, August 16, 2017.