Retirements from the Senate open seats to costly primaries and potentially contentious general elections

Senators retiring and not seeking reelection in 2018

Bob Corker
(R-TN)

- Corker is chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee and a frequent critic of Trump
- Rep. Marsha Blackburn (R-TN) is the Republican frontrunner to replace him
- Former TN governor Phil Bredesen (D) also announced his candidacy

Jeff Flake
(R-AZ)

- Flake decided not to run in light of low polling numbers against primary challengers
- Competitive Republican primary between US Rep. Martha McSally, State Rep. Kelli Ward and former sheriff Joe Arpaio
- Rep. Kyrsten Sinema (D-AZ09) is considered the Democratic frontrunner

Orrin Hatch
(R-UT)

- Hatch announced his retirement after initially deciding to run for an eighth term
- Former MA governor and presidential candidate Mitt Romney announced he was running for the open seat in mid-February and is expected to win nomination and the seat

Thad Cochran
(R-MS)

- Cochran announced his resignation effective April 1, due to health concerns
- Gov. Phil Bryant (R) appointed Ag Commissioner Cindy Hyde-Smith, a former Democrat, to fill the seat until a Nov. 2018 special election
- She will be challenged by hard-right State Senator Chris McDaniel (R)
- Mike Espy (D), a former US secretary of agriculture, intends to run
- Both Mississippi Senate seats will be on the ballot in November

Al Franken
(D-MN)

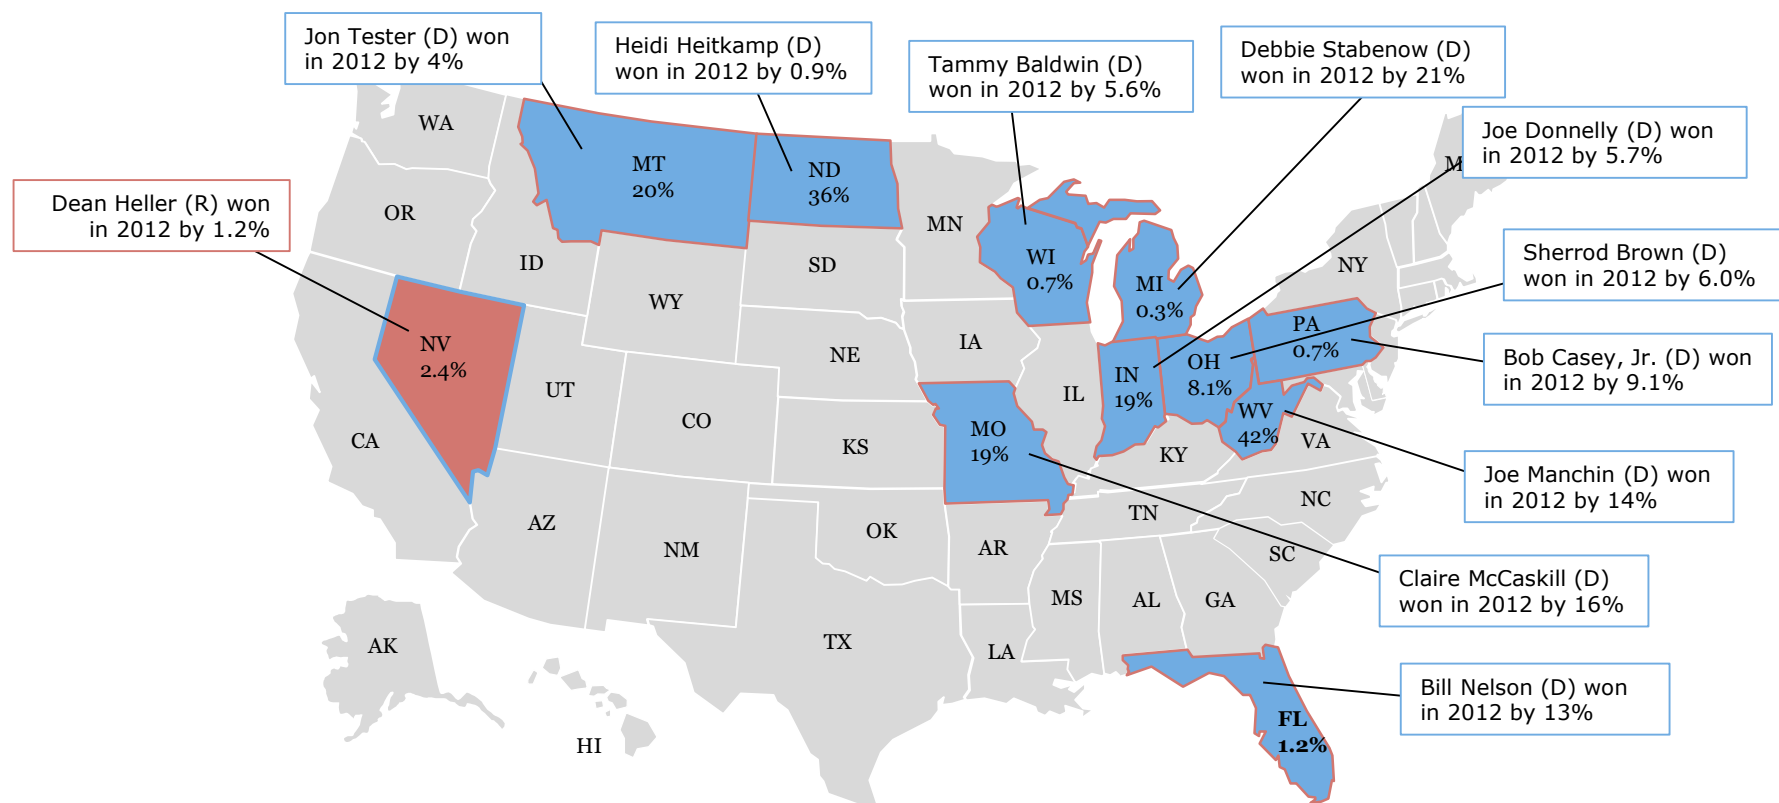

- Franken resigned on January 2nd amid a sexual harassment scandal
- He was replaced by Tina Smith (D) who will run in November to finish his term
- Both Minnesota Senate seats will be on the ballot in November

Of the 26 Democratic senators up for re-election, Trump won 10 of their states – and five by double digits
